BRIGADE DESERTS

MA CHAN-SHAN'S ADVANCE

Shanghai, Nov. 5. In an attempt to wrest Tsitsihar from the Japanese, General Ma Chan-shan's forces co-operating with the anti-Manchukuo Volunteer forces, are converging on the city.

The area threatens to develop into a theatre for a large-scale struggle before very long, according to Chinese, reports,

It is reported that the vanguards Ma . Chan-shan's army have selready reached Yanchiatian, in vicinity of Tsitsihar, their advance having been facilitated by further defections in the ranks of the Manchukuo forces.

MANCHUKUO DEFECTION.

A full brigade of Manchukuo troops descried their Japanese allies at a crucial moment when engagement was imminent The Japanese forces were compelled to retire in the face of superior numbers.

The mutineers have now joined the ranks of the anti-Manchukuo groups and stiff fighting for Tsitsihar, one of the most important centres on the western section of the Chinese Eastern Railway, is believed to be imminent.

South and West passed in every case. When the North hand was held by a player of the old school who refused to open with less than three high card tricks, the deal was passed out completely with no score for either side.

However, when Louis H. Watson sat North on this deal, he opened the bidding with one heart. East bid two diamonds and South overcalled with two no trump. Mr. Watson felt that his' six-card heart suit justified a re-bid to three and his partner carried him to four hearts, which became the final contract.

East opened with the king of diamonds, which was won in dummy by the ace. A small heart was led from dummy and when West played low, Mr. Watson finessed the ten-spot. He was unpleasantly surprised when East failed to follow suit and he realized that only very careful play would enable him to make the contract.

He must evidently lose clubs and the ace of hearts and could only avoid losing another heart trick by leading that suit

IS YOUR STOMACH UPSET BY QUININE?

DISAGREEABLE AFTER-EFFECTS OVERCOME.

A few people cannot take quining assumed that an opening bid in third position after two passes should be somewhat stronger than an opening bid by dealer. Many of the experts have now reached the opposite conclusion and will open the bidding in third position with a hand which would be passed without question as dealer.

The national masters' contract pair champlonship of the American Bridge League produced this hand. Which illustrates this point very well.

A Lew people cannot take quintres at, all, while nearly overyone suffers from its disagreeable after-effects. The reason for this is that quinine in any form causes an excess of acid in the stomach, which generates gas and attacks the delicate stomach "ining, causing indigestion, dyspepsia, flatulence, cramp, tec. To avoid these painful disturbances you should make a habit of taking half-a-teaspoonful of Bisurated' Magnesia in a little water before the quinine. This has the effect of not only neutralising excess acid, but also coating the wall of the stomach with a protective alkalino coating, which is impervious to the acid reaction of the quinine. The use of Bisurated' Magnesia before taking quinine is advised and recommended by the hegt-known specialists in tropical disease; and your own doctor will only approve this use, but also whenever indigestion of the stomach pains follow enting. at, all, while nearly overyone suffers tion or stomach pains follow enting.

WAR WITHIN THE B.B.C.

ENGINEERS GET UPPER HAND

The three B.B.C. delegates to the Madrid Radio Congress have unmasked their guns. In the matter of interference between transmitting stations the British proposals are that there should be a maximum power allowed to any station in proportion to the area which it has to cover to serve its own country. This is an attempt to confine broadcasting within national boundaries.

It has been well known for many years that there is a mild state of war existing within the British Broadcasting Corporation.

The engineers, jealous for the reputation of their stations as regards quality, would have all listeners confine themselves to their local transmitter. This may be overstating the case, but it indicates the frame of mind of those responsible for transmission.

On the other hand the Corporation has adopted as its motto, "Nation shall speak peace unto Nation," and its publicity department, by the weekly issue of worldwide programmes, encourages British listeners to seek their entertainment among foreign stations.

Apparently the engineers have had their own way with regard to suggestions for minimising interference. That they will have any appreciable success in persuading the very high-power stations to reduce their aerial wattage is unlikely.

Four of the highest-power stations are Russian, and though they definitely exist for propaganda purposes, can excuse their enormous radiating capabilities on the ground that their own country covers a huge area. The other very high-power stations, though not definitely propagandist, are probably regarded as having considerable value in advertising their country. The enteh phrase, "A place in the sun" seems to have turned into "A place in the ether."

In the unlikely event of the British delegation to Madrid carrying the day, and the Congress agreeing to some limitation of power, the B.B.C. should, logically, abandon its motto and give up the publication of "World Radio."

The situation is an interesting vards a better understanding beone. From the point of view of tween nations, which, in this counthe musician who wants to hear try, is shown by a very considereal music from his receiver, those able desire on the part of the

> The use of the two gives *double action cleansing

The tufted end, notched bristle surface, and extraresilient bristles of the Pro-phy-lac-tic reach between the teeth and behind the molars, allowing the wonderful cleansing agents of Listerine Tooth Paste to do their work most efficiently. Operating in perfect unison, the dentifrice and brush thoroughly clean every part of every tooth, massaging the margins of the gums, and producing a delightful feeling of cleanliness throughout the entire mouth.

Try double action cleaning. Notice yourself how swiftly it imparts a new brilliance to the teeth! Once you use double action cleansing you will never go back, to ordinary dentifrices and unscientific tooth brushes.

IMPORTANT: Pro-phy-lec-tic Tooth Brushes are always sold in sani-tary yellow boxes; never loose. Listerine Tooth Paste is sold usually at considerably lower prices than other quality dentifrices. It should save you enough to pay for the Pro-phy-lac-tic Brushes you use.

AIRSHIPS IN THE FUTURE

There was a time, not so long ago, when the crossing of the Atlantic by the Graf Zepplin was an item of news to which worldwide prominence was given. The record of the big German craft, however, has changed all that. Nowadays, the movements of this huge dirigible attract little attention, for the simple reason that, with her the Atlantic crossing has become quite a commonplace incident. She has just concluded her ninth trip for the year. thus completing no fewer than twenty-nine crossings, all without untoward incident—a really remarkable record, which is a credit alike to German engineering skill and to the abilities of Dr. Eckener, her noted comman-

Engineers Decide on Monoplane:

THE CANTILEVER PRINCIPLE.

Not for very many years has there been produced a commercial aircraft with so many interesting features as those one finds on inspecing the new A.W. XV monoplanes, which are now passing through the Armstrong-Whitworth shops at Whitley, Coventry. Eight of these machines are on order for Imperial Airways, Ltd., and the "Atalanta." is already flying, and visited the S.B.A.C. display at Hendon, where it attracted unusual attention. The others are well on the way, and for once it looks as if the old saying that no new aircraft type, let alone a batch of large machines, is ever produced on time, will prove false. The "Atalanta" has done a deal of flying, and such minor "teething troubles," as any new type is likely to suffer from, have already been discovered, and, as far as can be ascertained, remedied. It is true, of course, that only in actual service over the route for which it was designed can it be settled quite definitely whether or not a new commerical aircraft type is entirely higher performance than we have successful, but the few difficulties hitherto been accustomed to in encountered have been tackled and British, commercial acroplanes. overcome, and the first machine is now reported to be ready for its final, searching tests, according to a contributor to "Flight."

For a good many years the British aircrait designer has been content to follow a conservative policy in the general lay-out of his machines. The biplane type had the advantage of low structure weight, and for a very long time the British aircraft designer refused to be influenced by the vogue of the monoplane type abroad. Nor was he altogether to be blamed for this attitue. The biplane type of structure was known to be lighter, in machines of the same landing speed, than that of the monoplane, particularly the cantilever monoplane. And as it has been a guiding principle in British commercial aviation for many years not to sanction very high landing speeds, a very good case could actually be made out for the biplane. Progress in aero-engine design and construction during the last years has been such that a complete breakdown of an engine now a very rare occurrence. adopting, as the designers of the A.W. XV have done, a fourengined arrangement of the power plant, the chances of what may be termed a hurried forced landing, as distinct from a more leisurely get rid of all avoidable drag. As precautionary landing on a select. I an instance of the degree to which ed site, have become still more drag has been reduced, it may be remote. This means that a somewhat higher landing speed than hitherto adopted can be tolerated. Once that point is conceded, the relative merits of biplane and ponents of an aircraft join each monoplane have to be reconsider. other, is nil. In other words, the ed. For the same landing speed, drag of the whole machine is the the monoplane will be a larger sum of the drags of its commachine, larger, that is, in wing ponents, and not, as is very often span and probably overall length. the case, that sum plus something While the landing speed was low extra which represents interi.e., while the wing loading was ference. Much work has been low, the monoplane size as com- done in the Armstrong-Whitworth pared with the biplane, was rather wind tunnel (which is under the prohibitive. As the wing loading is increased in conformity with models of the "Atalahta;" and the the higher permissible landing low drag achieved is largely to be speed, the defference in size be- attributed to the wind tunnel comes less, and a point is reached when it is no longer safe to say that the biplane is, on balance, the "better" type.

In the A.W. XV we have an aircraft designed for a good deal permitting a larger load. The single wing of this plane, although of the folding type, as shown at right, is strong enough to bear the weight imposed on the ordinary biplane wings. .

Exact performance figures are not yet available, but the cruising speed will probably be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 120 m.p.h.

The higher performance, and the increased landing speed made permissable by a reliable power plant divided into four units, has been made the basis of a very exhaustive study by the Armstrong-Whitworth engineers into the subject .- biplane or monoplane? They came to the conclusion that, for the purpose in view, the monoplane offered the better solution, and the A.W. XV is their interpretation of that solution.

Extremely careful streamlining is the main feature that impresses trolled by them, for an one when first confronted by the "Atalanta." The designers started by selecting the cantilever monoplane_type of wing arrangement. They then decided to place the four engines in the leading edge of the wing, and to fair them into the wing surface with as gradual a change of section as ever having seen before, and the inaccessable parts. The respective deed a credit to the Colony. result is a very gradual merging of the engine nacelles into the wing covering. The engines themselves have been fitted with drag-reducing rings, so that everything possible has been done to mentioned that "interference drag," which is the term used to express the extra drag which often arises where two comcontrol of Mr. Roynolds) on work. > Continuing, he says that a 9 h.p. sports car, with a speed of 70 m.p.h., or more, only pays the same premium as a 10 h.p. car with a maximum under 40 m.p.h. and, in some companies, the 10 h.p. has to pay more. He dismisses the question of car value in premiums as being of little moment, as, he says, obviously few companies fix rates on value. though the value of the car drops steeply year by year of its life. On the question of drivers I am not in agreement with my cor-

12 h.p. car sells it and buys an 18 h.p., he argues, why should an insurance company say he is a worse driver-for, in effect, this is what they do say, to judge by the premium he has to pay as n "risk," an 18 h.p. car premium being considerably higher than the one he paid while driving a 12 h.p.

A good driver is one who has keen observation; ability to think control; obeys the rules of the road, and uses common sense. It is the way the car is driven by the owner that is the risk, for the car -by itself-can do no harm.

Why, then, by charging him an extra premium, should the company maintain that because a man changes from a 12 h., to an 18 h.p. he has the qualities of a good driver in a lesser degree?

On the grounds of equity and common sense, it is contended. the whole position is absurd and the methods out of date. Further, a man who has had no experience in driving can insure a 12 h.p. at the same premium (apart from the no-claim bonus) as the man who has been on the 'road' 10 years without an accident. No matter what the h.p., the two are treated alike in the same h.p. class. In this not obsolete and absurd?

Again, a man of experience, with no black marks against him, driving a big car has to pay relatively much more in premium than the man with a small car and a bad record, for all that happens is that the small carman has to pay the first 45 or $10 of his claims.

"A car cannot be a risk unless it is used," my reader adds, "and the risk must increase or decrease according to the user driving it. Why, therefore, do not insurance companies recognise that conditions have changed; drop the unjust Treasury h.p. and value method of premiums, and fix them on the thing that matters the record of the driver?"

TAX CARS BY WEIGHT:

> for Private Motorists.

By Chiltern In the "News-Chronicle"

Coming as it did in the midst of the holiday season, the report of the Conference on road and rail transport and its possibilities regarding the use of the private car has been largely lost sight of by average car owners.

Since its publication , there has grown a belief that the recommendations-though concerning commercial vehicles only-will affect private cars, and it is curious how persistent is this belief, for there is nothing to substantiate it.

The Road and Rail Report held that the only fair principle in motor taxation is to distribute the annual cost to roads according to a just In the goods vehicle field an estimate of the use enjoyed by the attempts, states Mr. A. £60,000,000 Burden

The Conference had before them three taxation proposals, and docided on a system of allocation based equally on ton-mileage and on petrol consumption. It is rash to think, as some few undoubtedly do. that this may be translated into law in the Finance Act of next year with respect to cars, and it is equally rash to assert, as some are doing, that because the Conference fixed £60,000,000 as the burden to be carried jointly by all motors, there will be no change in private car taxation for several years.

With such collaboration, for example, the 'container system' can probably be developed and arrangements made for through rates, for collection and delivery by road and long-distance transport by rail, to an extent not otherwise possible and with results that would be of great benefit to trade and indutry and to the whole economic development of the country,

In conclusion, it is stated that the comprehensive measure agreement disclosed by the report has necessarily been reached by concessions on both sides. This has been expressed in a scheme of which each section is an integral and interdendent part, and it must not be assumed that if one part were rejected the Conference would remain agreed upon the remainder. Conscious that rejection of one part might endan-ger the whole, the Conference has taken special pains to avoid prejudice to absent interests.

SALE OF OPIUM IN HONGKONG

LOCAL LAW BEING AMANDED

The draft has been issued of an Ordinance to amend the Opium Ordinance of 1932.

It is explained that in Article I of the Opium Agreement signed at Bangkok on the 27th of Nocember, 1931, it was provided that the retail sale and distribution of opium should take place only from Government shops or, where local circumstances make the establishment of Government shops difficult; from shops managed under Government supervision, by persons appointed, by the Government for that purpose and remunerated by a fixed payment and not by a commission on

This Ordinance accordingly adds a proviso to section 10 of the principal Ordinance making it clear that the power to appoint suitable persons to sell prepared oplum is to be exercised only where local circumstances make the establishment of Government opium shops difficult.

The amending Ordinance also adds a sub-section to section 13 principal Ordinance effect to Article III of the Bangkok Agreement which that prepared opium should be sold only for cash, the principal Ordinance, which nermit to carry small quantities; of prepared opium for personal consumption on the voyage, is re- instrument or a heavy blow with a pealed. No special permits have been issued and the proviso is considered to be in conflict with Oplum Agreement of Feburary, 1925, under which His Majesty's Government have undertaken to prohibit, without exception, the export of opium from any possession or territory into which it is imported for the purpose smoking.

DRAMA OF THE LAST MAN TO LEAVE

While a 95-mile-an-hour wind was lashing the cargo steamer Watford, which lay with her back broken on the rocks of Nova Scotia, two men stood on the deck

The story of this last argument on the Watford's deck was told when the 30 survivors of the ship reached Liverpool in the liner Adriatic.

"When we were driven on to the rocks we tried to lower a boat," said one of them. "Failing in this, the second officer, Mr. H. Mant, of Seven Kings, Ilford, volunteered to swim ashore with a rope. He got there after a ter-rible struggle, but the rope was swept loose from the ship. We fired rocket lines to Cape, Breton fishermen and rigged up a bos'n's 'chair' from ship to shore. One by one the crew were hauled across until only two men remained in the ship—the mate and the the bos'n had begun to argue.

"While the hurricane—the worst on the coast for 60 years—was raging the two figures could be seen gesticulating.

"Neither would agree to go first and leave the other. Finally they decided to go together.
"The bos'n climbed into the swinging chair on the line and the mate tried to get in beside him, but he suddenly lost his hold, fell into the sea and was drowned."

The mate was Mr. William Knight, of Aberdeen, and the bos'n was Mr. Donald Murray, of Stornoway, Shetland Islands.
